*A summer
graduate program
like no other*

---

Explore
your inner potential.

Bread Loaf School of English is a six-week intensive summer graduate program of Middlebury College, with locations in Vermont, New Mexico, and Oxford, England. You'll meet and work with some of the finest faculty in the fields of literature, creative writing, literacy and pedagogy, and theater arts.

Why Bread Loaf?

Bread Loaf's diverse and progressive curriculum is designed for K–12 English and language arts teachers who are looking for an intensive summer graduate-level learning environment. In six weeks of rigorous on-campus study, you can work toward a master's degree or earn a certificate in Continuing Graduate Education, taking courses such as Multilingual Writing, the Modernist Novel, Teaching Shakespeare's Tragedies, and the Fiction of Finance.

The Best of the Best

At Bread Loaf, the distinguished and dedicated faculty are an active part of the community. Classes are small, meals are shared, and conversations can crop up anywhere, anytime—on a sunny front porch, during a morning hike, or over afternoon tea. Faculty are approachable and open to discussing anything from a reading challenge or writing idea to a film you saw in town. Throughout the summer, you'll also have the chance to interact with an inspiring group of acclaimed visiting writers and speakers, who participate in classes and workshops.

Community That Lasts

Founded in 1920, Bread Loaf has long been a highly respected institution of graduate-level study. Students come from all walks of life, and from all around the world. Whether you want to earn a master's degree or gain professional development, Bread Loaf is a cohesive community that will energize you with a lifetime of relevant resources. And the nationally recognized Bread Loaf Teacher Network provides year-round connections with other teachers to promote collaborations, support, and the development of innovative teaching practices.
